PREFACE

TO THE GLASGOW EDITION

Of this new Abridgment of Ainsworth's Dictionary, it will not be necessary to give any very lengthened or detailed account. The plan was suggested by the Proprietor, who considered, that, if he furnished the Tyros in Latin with all that was required for them in a convenient form and at little more than one half the usual price, he would do a service to the community. With this view, he has spared no expense, and the Editor has exerted his best efforts, that the Work may be both complete and accurate.

In the English and Latin part, the Editor was to retain the best Latin words and expressions; but to exclude all which he might judge superfluous or inappropriate. At first sight, the last appeared easy, but was found often difficult. It frequently required much consideration before a choice could be made of the words to be retained, and those that would fall to be blotted out. In several instances, many suitable words or expressions were added, for which the Editor is, of course, responsible. The Abridgment formed an essential part of the plan, yet it was not intended to suppress any thing which, to the young scholar, was of importance. Studying particularly the interest of the latter, and trusting to the liberality of the Proprietor, the Editor has allowed this part of the Work to remain considerably more extended than was either wished or anticipated.

With respect to the Second Part, nothing was expected from the Editor except removing all the Latin examples. To accomplish that, little time or mental exertion seemed necessary. As he proceeded, the duty required deeper thought and more anxious consideration, than would have been previously imagined. Of the explanations, many were nearly synonymous, others did not depend on the proper meaning of the word under discussion, but on the other terms with which it was conjoined in a particular sentence. To change such translations, and to adhere as closely as possible to the original meaning, was judged a benefit to the young student. Too many senses given to one word often bewilders the untutored mind, particularly at first, and with boys of slow capacity. Perhaps the Editor might without injury to the Work have carried retrenchment in this respect still further, had the original design permitted.

In the inflections of verbs, especially those of the first conjugation every classical scholar knows, that Ainsworth varied his mode as the work proceeded. Towards the beginning, he gives only the first and second persons singular of the present of the indicative active, leaving the scholar to infer that the verb is regular, a supposition which, in some instances, would lead to mistake, yet no blame can attach to him. The fault lies with the lexicographer. As the Author advances, he frequently gives the first person singular of the present of the indicative, and the present of the infinitive. It may be added, that in the passive voice, he sometimes has only the first person singular of the present of the indicative, in others the present of the infinitive is likewise given, and not unfrequently the perfect participle. To obviate these difficulties, extremely perplexing to the weak mind, all the verbs are fully conjugated From his own experience, the Editor knows it will save much labour both to Teacher and Scholar. To adjectives which are irregular in declension, the genitives are almost uniformly subjoined. Adverbs are frequently compared, and their roots inserted; the same method has been followed with adjectives, unless when they fell under general rules. Several other alterations have been introduced for the sake of the young Latin scholar, which the Editor hopes will meet the approbation of the candid and impartial judge.

Of the other improvements, whether from supplying omissions or correcting inaccuracies, some perhaps original, or the effect of careless printing, the Editor shall say nothing. What to the advanced scholar may appear trivial, to beginners may be of important advantage, by quickly solving a difficulty, or superseding tedious and sometimes fruitless research, exceeding the power of their intellect.

Considering the smallness of the Volume and nature of the Work, some may be of opinion that greater detail has been given than propriety demanded. The Editor has only to add, that, for the sake of the learner, he has neglected nothing which accurate and complete information, or readiness of consultation appeared to acquire.

From the great reduction in size, the public may be apt to suppose that there has been not only an abridgment of the articles, but a diminution of their number. On examination, the reverse will be found to be the case; for several additional articles have been inserted, which will not be found in former Editions, but were deemed necessary to complete the intention of the Editor

NOTE

BY

THE AMERICAN EDITOR.

The object and plan of the present work are so fully developed in the preceding preface, as to render any farther remarks in relation to them quite unnecessary. It was believed by the American publishers, that this dictionary would be an acceptable present to the young scholars of our country, and would supply a deficiency which had long been felt. In order, however, to render the volume as useful as possible, various additions have been made. The Roman calendar, and several tables have been prefixed to the English-Latin part; and at the end of this portion of the work will be found some remarks on the Latinization of Proper Names. Observations on synonymes, &c. are interspersed throughout the second part of the volume, and are marked by brackets. A dictionary of Proper Names is also added, with corrections and improvements, from the work of Dr. Niblock. In this last division, the object of the editor has been, as will readily be perceived, to blend conciseness with accuracy, and to furnish the young student with an outline which his veteran studies on his part should one day fill up.

* The Romans divided their months into three parts by Kalends, Nonas, and Ides. The Kalends (Kalendæ) were so termed from an obsolete verb calare, to call over, and were on the first day of the moon or month; for Romulus began his months on the first day of the moon. On this day, one of the inferior priests used to assemble the people in the capitol, and proclaim or call out to them, that it was new moon, naming at the same time the number of days between the Kalends and the Nonas. This was done because it behoved the people, who lived in the country, to assemble in the city on the Nonas of every month, in order to be informed by the Rex Sacrorum of the feasts and holidays; and to learn in general, what they had to do in regard to sacred matters, during that month. The Nonas (Nonæ) were so called, because, counting inclusively, there were nine days between them and the Ides. In March, May, July, and October, the Nonas fell on the 7th, but in the other months on the 5th. The Ides (Idus) were so called from the obsolete verb idare to divide, because they divided some, and nearly divide others, of the months. In March, May, July, and October, the Ides fell on the 15th. in the other months on the 13th. It is to be observed, that the Romans in computing their time, always included the day from which, and also the day to which, they reckoned; thus they called the 1st of January, Kalendæ; the 31st of December pridie Kalendas (or Kalendarum;) the 30th, no secundo, but tertio (ante) Kalendas.

† In reckoning the days of their months, the Romans counted backwards. Thus, the first day of the month was, Kalendis or Ipsis Kalendis, and the name of the month either follows as a noun in the genitive singular, or else as a plural adjective agreeing with Kalendis. The 2d of the month is so many days before the Nonas; and after the Nonas, each day is so much before the Ides. After leaving the Ides, each day is so much before the Kalends of the next month.

‡ Every leap-year, (called in Latin Bissextilis;) in which February has 29 days, both the 24th and 25th days of that month are written, Sexto (ante) Kalendas Martias. Hence the name Bissextilis, i. e. Bis sexto Kalendas Martias § Marked L. L. S. (i. e. Libra, Libra, Semis, a pound, a pound, a half-pound, or two pounds and a half,) or LLS, which is commonly written HS. The Romans usually computed sums of money by sestertii, or sestertic. Sestertium is the name of a sum, not of a coin. When a numeral adjective is joined with sester ii, it means just so many sesterces; thus decem sestertii = 10 sesterces; but when it is joined with sestertia, it means so many thousand sestertii; thus, decem sestertia = 10,000 sesterces. If a numeral adjective of another case is joined with the genitive plural, it denotes so many thousand; as decem sestertium = 1,000 sestertii. If a numeral adverb is joined, it denotes so many hundred thousand; as decies sestertium = ten hundred thousand sestertii. If the numeral adverb stands by itself, the signification is the same.

Tharm, intestina sulia torta ad multas res accommodata.

That [a pronoun demonstrative] ille, is, iste.

That [who or which] qui.

Note, this is an improper use of the word, since it can only be used as a relative pronoun when it forms the nominative to a verb, or is governed in the accusative by a verb. Besides it wants the distinction of gender.

The same that or as, idem ac, atque, et, ut.

That [a conjunction] ut, quo, quod.

Note, 1. That, signifying because, and denoting time past, when it comes before a verb, may be rendered into Latin by quod; as, I am glad that you are returned safe, quod tu redisti incolumis, gaudeo. But that, signifying to the end that, denoting time to come, and coming before a verb, which signifies to desire, fear, command, labour, take care, &c. must be made by ut; as, I desire that you will act the play, ut tu fabulam agas, volo.

Note, 2. That quod and ut may generally be better omitted if the verb immediately following them be put in the infinitive mood, and its nominative case changed into the accusative; as, They say that he manages his own business, suum se negotium agere sibi cum, for quod ille agit.

Seeing that or since that, cura, quum, quando, quoniam.

Inasmuch that, adeo ut.

So that, dum, dummodo.

To the end that, eo, ideo.

Thatch, culmus, stipula.

To thatch a cottage, &c. casam, &c. culmis tegere.

A thatcher, qui casas culmis tegere solet.

A thaw, glaciæ v. nivis resolutio.

To thaw, act. regelare.

The, before a noun substantive, may, for the most part, be omitted in translating into Latin, as being sufficiently included in the noun itself; except it denote the particular thing mentioned before, and then it is to be translated by hic, ille, iste; according to the gender of its substantive, and the particular thing thereby referred to, whether this, that or the other, or when it is emphatically used to show that some person or thing is more than ordinarily remarkable; as, Alexander the Great, Alexander ille Magnus. I, the self same person, ego ille ipse.

Then the same excellent man—Tum iste vir optimus—

The one—the other, unus—alter; alter—alter.

The first, the second, the third, primus alter, tertius.

From one end to the other, a principio ad finem.

From the one to the other, ultra citra que.

The, before a comparative degree, including in it by how much, by so much, is to be made by quanto, tanto; quo, eo, hoc, tam, quam; as The longer he is absent, the more I miss him quanto diutius abest, tanto magis cupio.

A theme or subject of a discourse, orationis argumentum v. thema.

A theatre [place for acting plays in] theatrum. A little theatre, theatridium.

Theatral or theatrical, theatralis

Theatrically, in modum theatralium.

Then [at that time] tum, tunc.

After that | tum, inde, postea, exinde. [Therefore] ergo, igitur, idcirco.

Now and then, subinde, interdum.

Thence, illinc, inde.

Theory [the speculative knowledge of a thing, in opposition to practical knowledge] contemplatio.

There [in that place] ibi, illic, istic.

Note, of late years, there is frequently, but most improperly used for thither; and where for whither—consequently hither and thither are becoming obsolete.

There, when it does not relate to place, has no particular Latin word for it; and in this sense, the nominative case in English is generally set after its verb, and not placed before it; as, At that lake there is a little mill, apud istum lacum est pistrilla.

Thereabout [about that affair] de v. in illâ re.

Thereabout or thereabouts [of place] circum, circa.

Thereafter, deinceps, exinde.

To tittle-tattle, garrere. blaterare.
Titular, secundum titulum, nomine tantum.
To or for, before a noun, is usually the sign of the dative case; as, Fortune has given too much to many, enough to none, fortuna multis minus dedit, nulli satis. Of the prepositions, ad only conveys primarily this idea; as, ad locum, to a place.

The preposition must be omitted, when the structure of the Latin words renders it superfluous; as, He has a kind of covetous fellow to his father, habet patrem quandam avidum. What a woman have you to your wife! quid mulieris uxorem habes!
To, before a verb, is generally a sign of the infinitive mood; as, To despise money at a proper time is sometimes the greatest gain, pecuniam in loco negligere maximum interdum est lucrum.
To, before a verb, may be also rendered into Latin other ways; viz.
By a gerund in di; as, Resolved to go, certus eundi.
By a subjunctive mood; as, I have a just right to do it, æquum est ut faciam.
By a future in rus; as, I am to go to Sicily, Siciliam profecturus sum.

To be short, brevitè, ne multa, ut præcis complectar.
To be, before a participle of the preterperfect tense, is generally rendered by the infinitive mood of the passive voice, as, He desires to be thought rich, cupit se haberi divitem. But it may be also turned into Latin several other ways; as, They praise those things which are not to be praised, laudant ea, quæ laudanda non sunt. It is open to be sold, palam est venale. They may seem filthy even to be spoken, dicti quoque videantur turpia. He desired to be taken up into his father's chariot, optavit ut in currum patris tolleretur. He will not be fit to be sent, non erit idoneus qui mittatur.

To be, if it allows any tense of the verb sum, may be made by a participle of the future in du; as, In this, Panætius is to be defended, Panætius in hoc defensus est.
Or by the verbal adjective in bilis; as, Love is to be cured by no herbs, nullis amor est medicabilis herbis.
Or by the relative qui, and the potential mood; as, Worthy to be sent to bedlam, dignus qui ablegetur Anticyras.
